dns client and server 8.6 To think of the differences between the two, let's take a look at the basics of the two systems. When the user first starts up sysprep, the system goes through a boot process, running various scripts at various stages of the boot process. In the Windows Server 2016 setup, the boot sequence includes: - Setup boots up - Setup completes, the system reboots - After rebooting, Setup.exe runs and checks the current computer's health state (configured using Group Policy). When this completes successfully, Setup.exe shuts down, and reboots again. - After rebooting, Setup.exe restarts. - After Startup Services completes, sysprep.exe starts. - sysprep.exe checks the system's health. - If all is well, it exits. If there is a problem with the system, sysprep.exe starts a repair process. - If the repair process fails, the user is prompted to reboot the system to fix it. So in total, there are three steps for the Windows Server 2016 setup: Reboot the system, enter the Setup.exe/Reboot option, then finally let the system finish rebooting. In the Windows Server 2012 R2 setup, the boot sequence includes: - Setup boots up - Setup completes, the system reboots - After rebooting, Setup.exe runs and checks the current computer's health state (configured using Group Policy). If this step fails, the Setup.exe/Reboot option is displayed. - After Reboot completes, Setup.exe starts. - sysprep.exe checks the system's health. If this step fails, the user is prompted to reboot the system to fix it. So in total, there are three steps for the Windows Server 2012 R2 setup: Reboot the system, enter the Setup.exe/Reboot option, then finally let the system finish rebooting.
